Violinist Sabrina Tabby, from Philadelphia, developed a fondness for chamber music at a very young age that has carried her through her life as a musician. At the Bard College Conservatory of Music, Sabrina performed across four continents, as concertmaster of and soloist with the Conservatory Orchestra, in chamber music, as well as in various baroque and new music ensembles. It was there that Sabrina became a founding member of the NYC-based new music ensemble, Contemporaneous, prominently featured on the Innova Recordings album “Stream of Stars: Music of Dylan Mattingly.” At Northwestern University, Sabrina was recognized for her fine playing both as a soloist and as a chamber musician, the recipient of numerous scholarships, awards, and competitions. She continues to travel the world to play music of all styles, recently making her solo debut in Paraguay with the Orquesta Sinfonica del Congreso Nacional de Paraguay, and performing as a member of the Quad City Symphony Orchestra. With her string quartet ATLYS, founded in 2016, Sabrina arranges and performs throughout the country a unique repertoire of the crossover genre. Their latest single, an arrangement of Ed Sheeran’s “Perfect” surpassed 1,000,000 streams within weeks of its release.

Teaching philosophy: My teaching philosophy hinges on two simple goals: to establish tension-free technique to most importantly cultivate artistry, to develop the student’s ears and problem-solving methods so that they may become their own best teachers. Every student will reach these goals via their own unique path but it is my job nonetheless to guide them there!
